What is an Organisational Raid?

Why do an organisational raid?

The visit provides a safe and secure environment in which to share learning and offers participants an opportunity to explore how alternative and innovative approaches might be applied in their own organisation. Raids can provide a cost-effective and flexible solution which are tailored for any level of seniority and learning objectives. Raids can be delivered as a stand-alone activity or incorporated into an existing learning and development programme.

What happens on the day?

No two raids are the same. WIG builds the day around your requirements and facilitates a programme of activity, which can involve any of the following:

- Executive/Board-level discussions
- Presentations by experienced professionals in the given field
- Site tour (if appropriate)
- Interactive exercises
- Conversations with frontline staff

By visiting the host organisation, participants are able to exit the daily distractions of the normal office environment and fully immerse themselves in a topic. After the raid is successfully completed, WIG will send you a summary of delegates' evaluations of the day.

How does it work?

Professionals from one (or more) organisations "raid" another organisation in a different sector to obtain quick, first-hand experience of their approach to specific issues.

Each Organisational Raid typically involves 10-15 people, but can go up to 20 participants. All participants are actively encouraged to take part in the Raid and we recommend there is at least one senior participant (i.e. director-level) who can lead the cohort and assist in facilitating discussions.

WIG delivers Organisational Raids for any level of seniority and has wide experience of arranging raids at different Grades, up to Permanent Secretary level.

Each raid involves a one-day on-site visit to a host organisation, with up to six presenters from the host. WIG uses its knowledge of its members to match an appropriate host and tailor the programme with speakers that are experts on the topic.

"The visit was really valuable. It was an excellent opportunity to get a fresh and very enthusiastic perspective... exposure to a completely different sort of organisation, and I learnt a lot about the importance of organisational culture and ways of working. It was a great opportunity to hear direct from senior staff about the key issues." DCLG delegate

"The most useful aspect was gaining a perspective on working practices within the host organisation both the good and the bad. Interesting to find out about the value they place on getting learning and flexible working right".

Marc Woodall, Surrey County Council.

"I valued the hindsight offered from lessons learnt. The reality that this huge task is really achievable in a positive way to benefit both employees and the business".

Andrea Harrison, Surrey County Council.

The Team WIG's exemplary track record in bringing together the sectors to learn from one another shows how our approach of support and constructive challenge from fellow members makes all the difference.

Roy Johnson – Roy manages WIG's Future Leaders Programme. Before joining WIG Roy worked for IBM as a technical specialist, managed IBM's Industrial Trainees and recruited for IBM's graduate development programme.

Lorraine King – Lorraine has worked in the public, private and third sectors, predominantly within health and social care in senior management and leadership development roles.

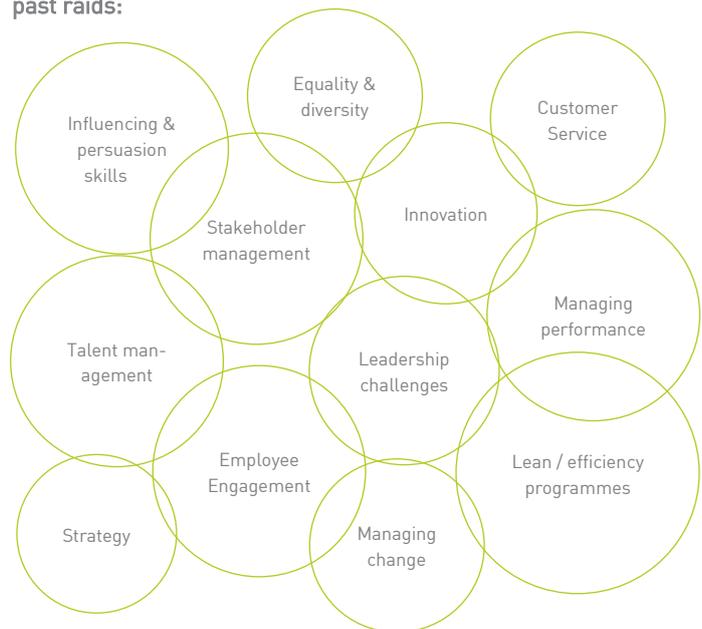

How you and your organisation will benefit

Each raid is a bespoke project for the raiding organisation which allows you to maximise the learning on your specific area of interest.

- Participants get to listen to, question and debate with experienced professionals in the given field.
- It provides space for you to consider how the issues might be applied in your own organisation.
- It gives you an opportunity to benchmark your own organisation against another whilst exploring cultural differences and new innovative approaches.

Both organisations involved benefit from a deeper understanding of the other's structures, ways of working and operational constraints. There is the opportunity for enhanced networking and extending peer level contacts and networks in a different sector.

WIG is able to construct Organisational Raids across any topic area. Below are examples of some topics we have covered in past raids:
